Help Metro make magic

Please donate to the Metro Magic annual holiday toy drive during the 2015 holiday season.

In keeping with the holiday spirit of giving, Metro is once again launching Tony's Metro Magic, our annual toy drive for underprivileged children in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

This year marks the seventh anniversary of the toy drive, which was renamed in memory of the man who oversaw the project for more than four years, Tony Metcalf, Metro's longest-running editor-in-chief. Mr. Metcalf passed away in 2013 from colon cancer at the age of 50.

Metcalf lit up every year as he saw the faces of children unwrap their holiday gifts. It is our goal to keep that magic alive. We are now asking readers to contribute what they can to Tony's Metro Magic.

Metro has created a wish list at the Target website that readers can access by going to www.metro.us and clicking on the Tony's Metro Magic logo.

From there, just choose the toys you wish to donate, pay online using Target's secure payment system. Your gifts, along with your name attached, will be delivered to Metro's offices in each city. This season we hope you will remember the children who will spend the holidays in shelters or who may not have gifts to open. Even one small gift can make a big difference in a child's holiday season.

Transit PD chief promises 'dignity and respect'

After interim role, Kenneth Green is sworn in as the MBTA's top cop.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

The MBTA's new police chief pledged to treat riders with "dignity and respect" Wednesday at his swearing-in ceremony.

"We will be transparent, accountable and responsible to those we have taken on to serve," said Kenneth Green, newly installed to lead the Transit Police force after more than a year in the role on an interim basis. "Whether you live on Humboldt Street in Waltham or Humboldt Avenue in Roxbury, Transit Police officers will treat you with dignity and respect."

Green, a Lynn native and 24-year veteran of the force, was selected from a crop of 65 applicants for the department's top job, T officials said. The T announced its selection in October. The agency previously picked Arlington Police Chief Fred Ryan for the position, but Ryan backed out, citing personal reasons.

In a speech, Green said the department has "numerous and daunting" challenges ahead, among them the "inhumane, deadly threat" of terrorism.

Green also said he wanted to roll out a new "patrol plan" for the department.

"I believe we'll have a greater uniform presence on the system, deliver more effective, efficient police services and have the safest system possible for all who utilize and enjoy it," he said of the plan, without offering specifics.

Green, who is black, said he grew up in what was "back then labeled a broken home" in public housing. After attending Boston University on a football scholarship, he went on to serve in the Winchester Police Department, then climb the ranks with the Transit Police.

In a speech, Gov. Charlie Baker called Green's story "uniquely American" and said he was pleased to see someone in the top spot with long-term knowledge of the department, "warts and all."

Green comes to the role after a push to make the force more diverse that included calls to hire him from the NAACP, black clergy and lawmakers, as the Boston Globe reported in October.

Darnell Williams, president of the Urban League of Eastern Massachusetts, said he was confident Green could help build trust between officers and T riders of color.

"There have been some issues with the MBTA and community members, but I think under his watch I can see that changing for the better," Williams told Metro.

In his now-permanent role, Green is poised to oversee a department facing the possibility of belt-tightening amid a budget deficit at the MBTA. T officials have said they are not considering layoffs.

In an interview, Suffolk District Attorney Dan Conley said he supported Green, and praised the department for its role helping make convictions. He also called for spending on adding more and better-quality cameras at T stops and urged the T to keep transit police in mind in budget talks, even if that means more officers on the ground.

"The T has almost what appears to be insurmountable financial pressures, but if the T system is not safe then riders won't ride," Conley told Metro. "One of the first priorities, I think, of the system has to be a safe rider experience."

Lots of money but no

Officials say there's no way to measure recovery despite sinking tens of millions of dollars into treatment programs.

NATE HOMAN
@MetroBOS
nate.homan@metro.us

Massachusetts has spent tens of millions of dollars for treatment of opioid addicts without establishing benchmarks for success — or even defining success — until a new task force was formed earlier this year. But officials are not drawing conclusions until July 2016 — after a year's worth of data is collected.

"In the short run, our focus has been expanding access and minimizing wait times for patients," Secretary of Health and Human Services Marylou Sudders said. "Before we can measure success, we need to expand access and increase the number of facilities. There is such a high rate of readmissions, those numbers will serve also as a huge indicator."

The long run has been a long, fruitless battle in the accelerating opioid crisis, resulting in the formation of a task force earlier this year to coordinate the effort.

In June, the opioid task force panel called for a $27 million initiative for a three-year plan funded by MassHealth with state and federal grants. The plan requires 100 new beds at state-funded treatment centers by July 2016, improvements in chain pharmacies' drug take-back programs, an increase in the availability of Narcan, and a rule forcing physicians to report narcotics prescriptions within 24 hours.

Sudders said that they will be looking into the number of opioid related deaths and the number of readmissions, what she termed a "bend in the trends."

Until the data are available, success is measured in personal standards, according to recovering addicts, addiction advocates, treatment executives and state employees.

"Success in recovery is an individualized question," said Fred Newton, executive director of the Hope House in Boston. "We have a program completion rate, but once they walk out our door, we have no sense of what happens next for them."

Hope House has a one-third completion rate per year for their six-month program, but that number is skewed because men can walk out of the program if they reunite with family and no longer need the program. Otherwise, the men are assessed on whether they can reach measurable goals like holding a job and finding a place to live.

In the past, the question about success was based on whether or not someone was abstaining from vices.

"It sucks," Jack Kelly, founder of the app iRecover said. "Recovery isn't like a cure or a remission. It's more like a bad breakup, and you haven't talked to your ex in months, but you think about them daily. Now think about that like a bag of heroin."

> "Recovery isn't like a cure or a remission. It's more like a bad breakup, and you haven't talked to your ex in months, but you think about them daily."
> Kelly

IRecover is a smartphone app that connects people in recovery who need support. Kelly said that studies have shown an increased success rate the more an addict has contact with supporters.

Kelly, who served on Mayor Marty Walsh's Substance Abuse Task Force, is 12 years off dope. His addiction began with a hockey injury when he was 16. He was given Oxycodone, got hooked and was homeless, shooting up at age 20. He cleaned up two years later.

"So many people fall into my situation, programs after-programs and therapy and some have worked," Kelly said. "I have tools at my hands, if I get discouraged, I can fight it off. I'll be having a good time and I will stop and think 'I cannot believe I don't need heroin right now.' That stuff ran my life. To this day, if I'm depressed I say, 'I kicked heroin, I can kick anything.'"

Gunmen kill at least

The shooting rampage marked the deadliest U.S. gun violence since the massacre at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut.

Gunmen opened fire on a holiday party on Wednesday at a social services agency in San Bernardino, California, killing 14 people and wounding 17 others before fleeing, authorities said.

As an intense manhunt for up to three suspects ensued, San Bernardino police reported one "suspect down" in an exchange of gunfire with officers but did not immediately confirm whether the individual was connected to the shooting.

The shooting rampage at the Inland Regional Center, about 60 miles east of Los Angeles, marked the deadliest U.S. gun violence since the massacre at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut, in December 2012, in which 27 people, including the gunman, were killed.

San Bernardino Police Chief Jarrod Burguan said in a televised news briefing three hours after Wednesday's shooting that the suspects were believed to have made their getaway in a dark-colored sport utility vehicle.

A vehicle matching that description turned up at the shootout with police several hours later, city police spokeswoman Sergeant Vicki Cervantes. One suspect is confirmed dead, a second suspect's condition is unknown, reports CNN.

With the suspects at large, authorities ordered a security "lockdown" of all local schools, as well as city and county buildings, and area hospitals were placed on alert, Burguan said.

"Obviously, at minimum, we have a domestic-type terrorist-type situation that occurred here." Burguan

He said the suspects were armed with rifles.

The shooting unfolded on the campus of the Inland Regional Center, one of 21 facilities set up by the state and run under contract by nonprofit organizations to serve people with developmental disabilities, said Nancy Lungren, spokeswoman for the California Department of Developmental Services.

ecutive director of the facility, told CNN the suspects opened fire inside a conference building in the complex where a holiday party was being held for county health department personnel.

The conference building sits adjacent to two larger three-story buildings that house most of the agency's offices at the complex, Johnson said. Asked whether that meant that the Inland Regional Center staff and clients were safe, she said she understood they were being evacuated. REUTERS

Former national security advisor Sandy Berger dies
Samuel "Sandy" Berger, a national security advisor for President Bill Clinton whose reputation was marred by his theft of classified documents after leaving office, died early on Wednesday.

Berger, 70, had been suffering from cancer, according to a statement from the Albright Stonebridge consulting firm where he worked.

Richard N. Haass, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, in a post on Twitter, called Berger a "good man & friend who served nation well as Bill Clinton's NSA."

Berger was heavily involved in relations with China. He also advised Clinton on other key developments, like the NATO bombing campaign in Yugoslavia and the attacks at Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia in 1996 and the U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998.

In the closing months of Clinton's term, Berger was a prominent player at the 2000 Camp David summit in which Clinton tried unsuccessfully to advance the Middle East peace process.

Those accomplishments were overshadowed in July 2004. That's when the Justice Department revealed it was investigating whether Berger had removed classified documents and notes from the National Archives several months before his testimony to the commission investigating the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks on the U.S.

At first, Berger said removing the documents in his attache case and pants and jacket pockets was accidental. Later, though, he admitted he had done it deliberately. One archives employee later said Berger stuffed the papers down his pants legs. REUTERS

U.S. Federal Reserve Board Chairwoman Janet Yellen GETTY IMAGES

Fed Chair says 'looking forward' to a rate hike

Yellen did not indicate if she still expected a rate hike would be warranted at the Fed's last remaining policy meeting this year on Dec. 15-16.

Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen said on Wednesday she was "looking forward" to a U.S. interest rate hike that will be seen as a testament to the economy's recovery from recession.

In her remarks to the Economic Club of Washington, she expressed confidence in the U.S. economy, saying job growth through October suggested the labor market was still healing although not yet at full strength. She also reaffirmed her view that the drag from abroad on U.S. economic growth and inflation would start to moderate next year.

Already, she saw risks from abroad as having dissipated since the summer. She noted consumer spending was "particularly solid" and that its outlook remained positive.

"When the Committee begins to normalize the stance of policy, doing so will be a testament ... to how far our economy has come," she said, referring to the Fed's policy-setting committee. "In that sense, it is a day that I expect we all are looking forward to."

Investors were already betting the Fed would lift its benchmark rate this month from the 0 to the 0.25 percent range, where it has held since 2008. Economists also see a strong chance of a December lift-off.

The dollar initially strengthened on the currency markets, indicating more confidence that higher interest rates were around the corner.

"Yellen gave a fairly positive assessment of the economy that would be consistent with the Fed raising rates at their December meeting," said Vassili Serebriakov, currency strategist at BNP Paribas in New York.

As in previous speeches and public appearances, Yellen said the timing of the first U.S. rate increase in nearly a decade was not as important as the path of subsequent hikes, which policy makers expect will be gradual. Waiting too long to raise rates could deal an accidental blow to the economy, she warned. REUTERS

Sandra Bullock lied to us all about her second adoption

Remember in late October when a reporter congratulated Sandra Bullock on adopting a little girl and Bullock completely insisted the story was totally untrue? Yeah, not so much. "If I had a second adopted child, everyone would be hearing about it," she said. And well, everyone's hearing about it now. It turns out she was just waiting for the exclusive deal she'd given People magazine to announce the news.

"When I look at Laila, there's no doubt in my mind that she was supposed to be here," Bullock says of her new daughter, whom she's now willing to admit she's adopted. "I can tell you absolutely, the exact right children came to me at the exact right time." Laila joins her first adopted child, Louis, who is apparently already all about the whole being a big brother thing. "Louis spearheaded this whole journey," she says. And that's a lot of responsibility for a 5-year-old. While I'm thrilled for Bullock and her family, I do wonder how long it will take for me to be able to trust her again.

Iggy Azalea breaks Twitter silence thanks to Erykah Badu

Iggy Azalea is no stranger to social media fiascos, which might be part of the reason her Twitter followers haven't heard a peep from the rapper since Nov. 1. But being a trending topic can have an effect on a lady, as Azalea made an online comeback this week to respond to Erykah Badu's mocking of her at the Soul Train Awards, which went viral almost immediately. "We are days from 2016, but I came online today and saw it's still cool to try and discredit my 2014 accomplishments," Azalea tweeted. "F—ing hell. Seems exhausting. Anyway, I've been enjoying the holiday season and I hope you all have, too." She also revealed that one of her horses might have Lyme disease. Wait, what?

Internet goes crazy after Bieber posts throwback pic of Selena Gomez

And it wasn't even Thursday! Justin Bieber stirred more fan speculation about the status of his situation with ex-girlfriend Selena Gomez by posting a photo of the two of them frolicking on a four-wheeler together to Instagram. I mean, even Drake was confused, as he commented, "Damn, thought this was a Jelena current-day flick." But alas, it's just nostalgia — or wishful thinking. Bieber clarified the posting by adding the caption, "Just a throwback, calm down." But for someone who got famous via the Internet, Bieber should know that Throwback Tuesday is not actually a thing.

"TANGERINE"

Sean Baker's indie had great timing. When it came out last summer, it was a film starring trans performers as trans characters — and released at a time when acceptance and awareness of transgender people finally hit the mainstream. But it had more going for it than topicality. Unlike a lot of the LGBT indies of the '90s, it wasn't a mere lesson in acceptance. The movie took the normalcy of its protagonists — sex workers played by sparkplug Kitana Kiki Rodriguez and wallflower Mya Taylor — as a given. It was thus freed to kick back and plow through a very funny farce that was brisk, dirty and serious when it finally, in its last moments, needed to be.

"DARKMAN"

Yes, there was a time when superhero movies weren't coming out every weekend. Back in 1990 audiences didn't go entirely nuts for Sam Raimi's confection about a disfigured scientist who becomes a masked avenger. It was ahead of its time in another way: the hero was played by Liam Neeson, two decades before people realized the fine Irish thespian would make a great Charles Bronson 2.0. When he did his "Spider-Man" films, Raimi had to chill out on his usual shtick. Here, he goes full throttle, wild and darkly funny. Indeed, nothing is as memorable as the villain's (Larry Drake) penchant for collecting victims' fingers.

City and Colour embraces the power of negative thinking

Dallas Green has a penchant for asking life's big questions. Here he tackles a few.

EMILY LAURENCE
emily.laurence@metro.us

Dallas Green, the man behind City and Colour, is a master of melancholy. His music has traditionally explored themes from the more somber side of life. His latest album, "If I Should Go Before You," is no exception. We talk to Green about celebrating the negative — and the few things in life he knows to be true.

Life, death and love

Despite his heavy lyrics, Green tells us there isn't always a gray cloud hanging over his head. "When I pick up the pen, it's usually when I have something to say that's been bothering me," he says. "I like to write about those 'why are we here' moments. I always think about life and death because those are the two certainties that we have. The only two things we know for sure are that we are born and that we will die."

But of course Green doesn't write just about mortality; songs about love — though not always "love songs" — make up a bulk of the City and Colour library. "It's not a certainty, but there's a good chance in everyone's life that they are either going to fall in love or out of love with someone or something," he says.

The album's title track is about all three themes: life, death and love. "It's about a love that's so strong it would outlast death," Green says. "It's stronger than both, life and death."

Impromptu counselor

Given his emotional lyrics, Green finds that people often turn to him in a time of crisis. "I talk to [people] every day at shows and they tell me some pretty heavy stuff," he says. Green struggles with being their shoulder to cry on. "I take on the burden of the situation because I don't want anyone to feel sad," he says.

"I can't fix [their problems], so I just try and listen and continue to write songs the best I can, and hope they are good enough that someone can take what they need from it."

Just another day job

While Green's career as a musician has been successful for a decade, he still struggles with continuing. "I definitely have moments where I don't want to do it anymore," he says.

But there are still moments that he says make everything worthwhile. "The amount of times that I come off stage very happy are few and far between. But the ones that are unbelievable and an outer body experience are the ones that keep [me] interested, wanting to do it more and trying to recreate that moment."

Remember Vanessa Carlton, whose piano pop hit "A Thousand Miles" seemed ubiquitous back in 2002? To many she's a one-hit wonder, but the singer-songwriter has continued to evolve and deepen. Her latest, "Liberman," dropped in October. Those who remember her early 2000s work will find her current sound more introspective and subtle, less dramatic but perhaps more substantive.

INSIGHT GUIDES

TRAVEL WEEKLY

INSIGHTGUIDES.COM TRAVEL WEEKLY, BOSTON, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 2015

ALL PHOTOS SHUTTERSTOCK

24 hours in Buenos Aires

Travelers can spend months in Buenos Aires and barely scratch the surface, but for those who are just passing through, here's a 24-hour guide.

Enjoy coffee and a medialuna ("half moon"-shaped pastry) at venerable B.A. institution Cafe Tortoni (www.cafetortoni.com.ar), whose art nouveau interior has changed little since it opened in 1858. Next, stroll a couple blocks to the Plaza de Mayo and visit the opulent presidential palace, the Casa Rosada, from where Peron delivered his speeches galvanizing the populace. Just beyond lies the upscale waterfront neighborhood of Puerto Madero and the sleek Puente de la Mujer.

Back in centro, point yourself towards Avenida 9 de Julio. With 20 traffic lanes, it is the widest avenue in the world. Here you'll find the famous Obelisco, an impressive monument that even Argentines admit was cribbed from a certain Washington, D.C., landmark.

A couple of blocks from 9 de Julio, Pizzeria Guerrin (www.pizzeriaguerrin.com) is the perfect spot for a gooey slice, a baked empanada and a chopp (draft beer).

After lunch, take the subway (subte) to Recoleta and visit the famous cementario. On the south side is Eva "Evita" Peron's final resting place, located in the tomb of the family Duarte. Stop off across the street at La Biela (www.labiela.com) or head to Palermo Soho to browse the boutiques and stroll the rose-lined pathways of the Paseo del Rosedal.

> Buenos Aires is a late-night city, with revelers hitting the clubs at 2 a.m. after a midnight dinner.

Take the subway to San Telmo and spend the rest of the afternoon strolling the cobbled streets of B.A.'s oldest neighborhood, browsing for antiques or just hanging out at a cafe.

New York may claim to be the "city that never sleeps," but Buenos Aires puts its money where its mouth is. Here it's not uncommon to see locals having dinner at 11 p.m. or midnight, children in tow. And revelers don't even hit the clubs until at least 2 a.m.

No one should visit this city without sampling authentic Argentine grilled beef. La Brigada (www.parrillalabrigada.com.ar) in San Telmo may be the gold standard, but for history, ambience and quality, head to El Obrero in La Boca. Gorge yourself on prime cuts of succulent beef until you wave the white flag of surrender. After dinner, take a cab to Plaza San Martin and BASA (www.basabar.com.ar), where the mixologists are of the finest pedigree. Try the Santa Marta.

Once B.A.'s witching hour strikes, it's time to party. Speed down Avenida Santa Fe in a taxi to Niceto Vega in Palermo. The options for debauchery here are many. There are thumping boliches like Niceto Club (nicetoclub.com), sophisticated discos like Ink (www.restaurantdisco.com.ar) and fun theme bars like El Tiki.

And if, in the early morning hours, you find yourself wired on no sleep and too many Fernet and Cokes, you'll know you've done Buenos Aires like a true Porteno.

Two perfect days in London

In a vast city filled with royal landmarks, world-class museums and galleries — most of them free — and cutting-edge architecture, where do you start?

Day One

Weather permitting, it's good to explore London on foot. Start on the South Bank of the River Thames, opposite the House of Commons. You're right next to the London Eye, so if it's a clear day, buy a ticket for the 30-minute ride. Head east along the waterfront past the Southbank Centre, a multi-arts venue comprising the National Theatre, Queen Elizabeth Hall and Royal Festival Hall.

Keep walking to Gabriel's Wharf, an eclectic gathering of artists and craftsman's shops and cafes. Further east lies the Tate Modern, a cavernous converted warehouse that's now home to a huge collection of contemporary and modern art. Until April 3, 2016, you can see "Alexander Calder: Performing Sculpture," an exhibition from this pioneering American artist.

Enjoy lunch on the sixth-floor restaurant, with its astounding views of the river and St. Paul's Cathedral. To visit this Sir Christopher Wren masterpiece, simply cross the Millennium Bridge outside the gallery. Alternatively, take the speedy DLR train from nearby Bankside station to Greenwich. Here, in the Royal Observatory's courtyard, home to the Greenwich Meridian Line, you can stand with one foot in each hemisphere.

In the evening, return to the city for a performance on London's famous stage: The award-winning "War Horse" runs until March, or Shakespeare's "The Tempest" can be seen at the intimate candlelit Sam Wanamaker Playhouse from Feb. 17 to April 22, 2016.

Day Two

Take a post-breakfast walk through Green Park, one of eight Royal Parks in London, and head up to Buckingham Palace, where crowds gather for the Changing of the Guard (11 a.m. on alternate days).

On the southern side of the palace is The Queen's Gallery, which exhibits royal treasures in a former 19th-century chapel. See the long-awaited exhibition "Masters of the Everyday: Dutch Artists in the Age of Vermeer," until Feb. 14.

Walk west through Hyde Park past the slender Serpentine Lake. On the south side, you'll see the Princess Diana Memorial Fountain. Outside the park, Exhibition Road is a hub of famous museums (all free). You can see sculptures and fashion at the V&A, or kid-friendly exhibits at the Science Museum and Natural History Museum, all of which have good cafes and shops.

For more high-class shopping, Knightsbridge calls. Walk or take a bus to the huge, famous department stores of Harrods and Harvey Nichols for luxury British fashions and food halls to die for.

You're now in one of London's most fashionable districts, with restaurants to match. For a blow-out experience, savor British gastronomy at Dinner by Heston Blumenthal, hearty Indian cooking at Haandi or French cuisine at Bar Boulud. Bon appetit!

A snow bowl, like the one seen in Philly two years ago, is coming this month — so mark it down. GETTY IMAGES

Ugly weather will mess with winter lineups

As we enter the season's final month, an increasing number of games will be affected by Mother Nature. It can create interesting roster conundrums on Sunday mornings as reports emerge about snow, rain, freezing temperatures and wind. We saw it just last week, as there were cold/wet conditions in Kansas City and snow in Denver. Some things to keep in mind:

Wind over all

The strongest negative correlation when it comes to weather is between wind and passing stats. As wind speed increases, fantasy numbers of quarterbacks and wide receivers decline at a steady rate. The key number is around 20 miles per hour, but I start getting a little concerned if we have sustained winds between 15 and 18 mph. This can especially affect a weaker-armed quarterback like Philip Rivers, Ryan Fitzpatrick or Andy Dalton.

Getting cold in here

Another condition to keep an eye on is temperature. Historical data shows that temperatures between 32 and 42 degrees only have a slight negative effect on quarterback production. But temps between 0 and 32 degrees have a far stronger impact on scoring. This makes sense, as truly freezing conditions make it harder to grip the football. Similar to baseball, the ball travels further in hot and humid situations.

Wet and wild

The general fantasy player overreacts to both rain and snow too drastically. As a general rule, I only let wet conditions affect my decisions if it's really severe. The Lions/Eagles "Snow Bowl" in 2013 comes to mind as an example of severe – Matthew Stafford and Nick Foles combined to complete 21 passes. But no wind and a little bit of rain can actually help a passing game, as defensive backs need longer to react to the cuts of receivers.

David Johnson, RB, Cardinals With Chris Johnson done, it's time for this athletic freak to spread his wings.

Scott Chandler, TE, Patriots Was already expanding his pass-catching role even before the Gronkowski injury.

DeVante Parker, WR, Dolphins Rishard Matthews has fractured ribs and the Dolphins are toast. It's time to unleash Parker.

Brandon LaFell, WR, Patriots No Gronk, no Edelman, no Lewis and a possibly limited Amendola. LaFell's matchup against Philly's Eric Rowe and Byron Maxwell on the outside is pristine.

Aries Emotional distress will ruin your plans. Don't let things bother you. Rise above others' words or actions and act out of kindness, courtesy and respect.

Taurus Make plans to entertain friends or family or host a festive event. Your enthusiasm and good will won't go unnoticed.

Gemini Take it easy and be smart. If you plan to go shopping or make some financial transactions, think twice before you go into debt.

Cancer Spend a little time on yourself. Getting a new hairdo or outfit for an upcoming event will boost your morale. Plan something fun.

Leo Use your witty and charismatic personality to attract interest in something you want to pursue. The attention you receive will result in support.

Virgo If you say you are going to do something, you must do it. It's important to research the feasibility of any venture before you start it.

Libra You will be quite upset if people don't honor their words. Leave nothing to chance by taking care of matters yourself.

Scorpio If you take an unusual position, you will discover something about yourself and those around you that will help you make an important decision.

Sagittarius Don't let a chaotic environment or frame of mind cause you to make choices that are questionable and easily criticized.

Capricorn Drastic measures may be necessary to get what you want. Setting a budget and sticking to it will allow you greater freedom.

Aquarius You should revisit old ideas and look over new agreements in order to find a way to meld the two. Do something out of the ordinary.

Pisces Do your best and refrain from getting into a dispute. Tread carefully when dealing with peers or people in authoritative positions. EUGENIA LAST
